About the conference

We are delighted to announce the next conference « Journées Nationales sur la Récupération et le Stockage d'Énergie » (JNRSE – « National Days on Energy Harvesting and Storage »), which will be held in Paris, in the Jussieu campus of Sorbonne Université.

The aim of this conference is to bring together researchers working on energy conversion, harvesting and storage, especially at small scale, as well as the design of complete self-powered devices. Young researchers, Ph.D. students and postdoctoral fellows will have the opportunity to present their work through oral presentations or posters. Moreover, invited talks from renowned French and foreign researchers will complete the program. The emergence of new collaborations, or the reinforcement of existing ones, between academia and/or industry is also one of the objectives of this conference.

Topics include but are not limited to

- Materials and systems for energy conversion and storage
- Fabrication and integration
- Electronic interfaces for energy extraction and management
- Micro- and nano-generators
- Microbatteries and supercapacitors
- Energy transmission
- Wireless autonomous devices and sensor networks
